Task: Constraints to Enhanced Revenue Mobilization and Spending Quality in Kenya

Position: Consultant

Date: 1st Feb. to September, 2019

Publication: Wawire, N.H.W. 2020. Constraints to Enhanced Revenue Mobilization and Spending Quality in Kenya. CGD Policy Paper 163. Washington, DC: Center for Global Development. <https://www.cgdev.org/publication/constraints-enhanced-revenuemobilization-and-spending-quality-Kenya>.

This study addresses constraints to enhanced revenue mobilization and spending quality in Kenya. The structure and growth of Kenya's economy and spending quality have a bearing on its taxable capacity. Constraints to enhancement of revenue mobilization and spending quality include the existence of a large informal sector; inadequate information on property ownership; perceived corruption; inefficient use of public resources; political interference; volatile election cycles; abuse of tax incentives; uneven transfer pricing; illicit financial flows; and untaxed online businesses, coupled with poor administrative capacity and tax policy design. Policy implications on revenue performance are (1) the National Treasury and Kenya Revenue Authority (KRA) should focus on property taxes and capital gains taxes to expand the tax base; (2) development partners are needed to direct technical assistance to the informal sector, to aid with transfer pricing, to monitor illicit financial flows, and to properly tax online businesses; (3) greater use of technology is needed to increase efficiency; (4) intervention by the Geospatial Information System is needed to link data on land and property ownership with tax information in the existing database; (5) a pay-for-results model needs to be deployed; (6) need to reduce tax expenditures; and policy reforms to be initiated in the agricultural sector. The policy implications on expenditure are (1) the need for efficient utilization of tax revenues; (2) the need for implementation of digital technologies; (3) the need to revisit an integrated financial management information system (IFMIS) configuration; (4) the need to adhere to long-term planning; and (5) adoption of the GFS 2014 reporting standard. Overall, an independent entity needs to be established that will set budget ceilings, monitor budget implementation, and carry out audits.

Task: Development Effectiveness of Structural Fiscal Policies in Sub-Saharan Africa: Pilot Country Study on Kenya.

Position: Economist/Consultant

Date: 2010

The study examines three critical issues pertinent to the development effectiveness of structural fiscal policies: i) how well are structural fiscal policies designed and planned; ii) whether fiscal space is created to enable structural fiscal policies to be funded; and iii) whether public financial management (PFM) capacities are good enough to implement effective structural fiscal policies. Key fiscal policies analyzed include taxation, government expenditure and debt practices. Good fiscal policies supported by robust PFM systems can help to accelerate economic development through expanded public expenditure in terms of both scale and efficiency. .

Task 1: Review and present a critique of the Commission on Revenue Allocation second criteria for sharing revenues among 47 County Governments

Position: Consultant [Economist]

Date: March to April, 2018

This was a background paper that focused on criticizing the second revenues sharing formula. It was prepared for two months with two other colleagues from the School of Economics of Kenyatta University. It was presented and discussed by the Commissioners of the Commission for Revenue Allocation (CRA). This paper changed the game in revenue allocation in Kenya since it led to the adoption of the Third Revenue sharing formula that takes into account the functions assigned to the two tiers of government. The main argument in the paper was that “funds follow functions”. These functions are clearly spelled out in schedule four of the Kenya Constitution. Therefore the third formula has to be formulated taking into account the functions to be undertaken by the County governments and National government as per the fourth schedule.
